

The difference between branding and brand strategy

A while back, a client showed me their brand, the logo, colours, packaging, all beautifully designed.

But they weren't attracting the clients they wanted, or many at all.

It took a moment to realize, they had branding but no brand strategy.

Branding is what people see. Strategy is what makes people feel and understand your brand's true purpose.

Without strategy, even the best visuals can fall flat and leave your ideal audience confused.

If you've been wondering why your beautiful brand isn't getting traction, this might explain what's missing.

How brand strategy helps you charge more and attract better clients

The first time I raised my prices, I was nervous.

I knew my work was worth it, but explaining my value every single time felt exhausting.

What changed everything? Clarity.

When my brand clearly showed what I stood for, my clients just got it. They saw the value without needing me to spell it out.

Strategy sharpens your message and builds trust. It helps you attract clients who are willing to invest because they understand what they're getting.

If you've struggled with pricing or finding the right clients, this could help make things clearer.

3 small website changes that make a big impact

A client once said to me, “I like how my website looks, but it’s not doing much.”

We didn’t start from scratch. Instead, we focused on three small changes:

- A clear call to action that visitors can’t miss

- Simplified navigation so people find what they want fast

- Testimonials placed where they really build trust

Just those tweaks made a noticeable difference.

Sometimes it’s not about a full redesign, but using what you have more strategically.
